Explaining Cancer to Children Someone I Love is Sick

Many parents are concerned that if their young child has had someone in their lives die from cancer, and they use the word cancer in a current situation, the child will worry that this person will also die. Remember that 2-6 year old children don't yet have the ability to make logical connections. They will usually take each situation individually, and will react on the basis of what they actually experience, not what they think might happen in the future.

Talking to your children about your cancer Cancer

At Cancer Council WA, we recognise that there is a gap in support for parents with cancer and their young children. Research suggests that peer support at any age can be an added support if provided in a supported and guided way, yet finding opportunities for young children to meet other kids in similar situations can be difficult.
